project guidelines

W henever one tries to picture a given market, even with the use of ‘keep it simple’ maps with just service networks on them, there’s always a need for some necessary simplifications. Below is a list of basic justifications to what we have included in this publication as well as why:

1. All traffic within European waters

The Atlas lists all ro-pax and ro-ro services that interlink ports within the seas surrounding Europe and surrounded by Europe. This means that regular lines to harbours in non-European coasts of the Mediterranean region are also included, whilst destinations in Africa and Asia are listed only because they are on a service’s way from at least one European port. However, we have excluded connections to the Atlantic coasts of Africa and the Atlantic Ocean islands outside the geographical boundaries of Europe (like in the case of the Canary Islands).

2. Only regular ro-pax and ro-ro services

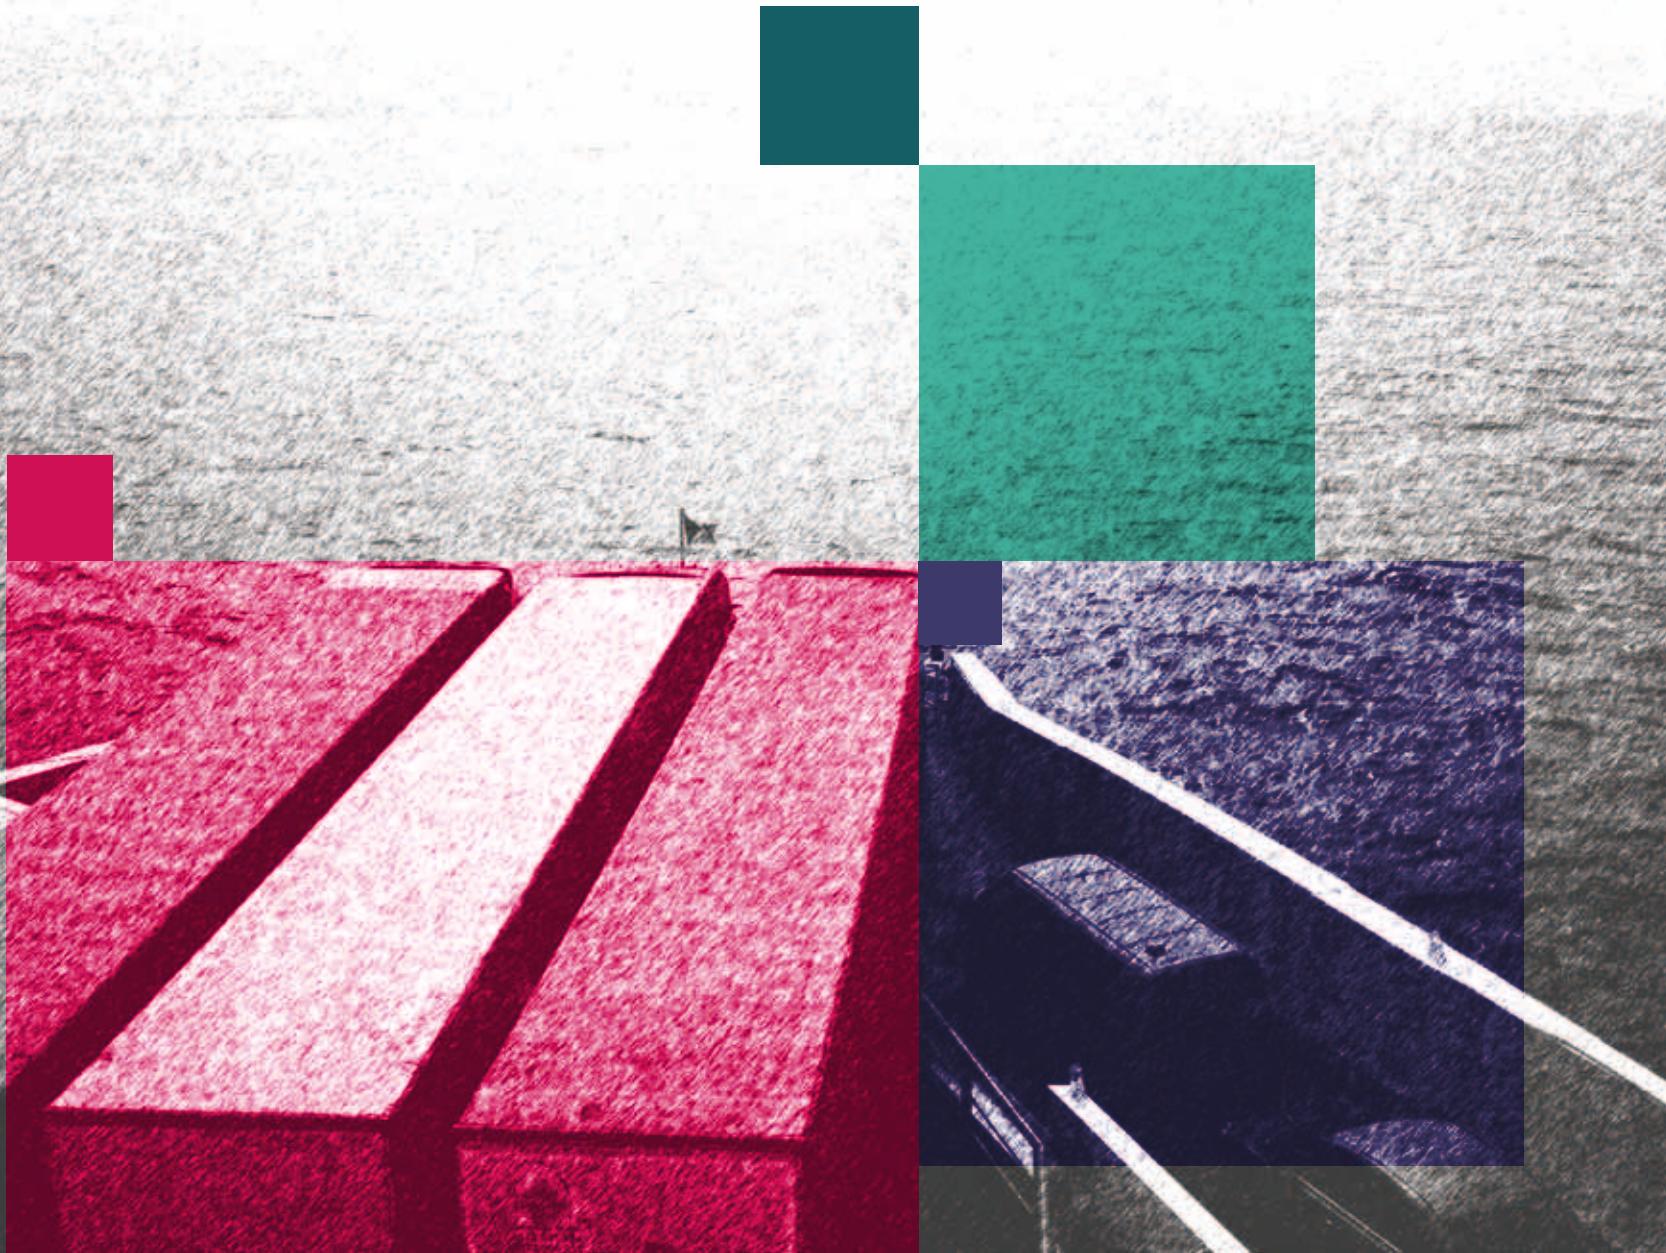

The maps and charts solely cover open access services, which can be treated as extensions of public highways and bridges, therefore dedicated industrial shipping lines as well as pure passenger services aren’t included. Moreover, the Atlas’ census marks strictly regular services regardless of their frequency (be it daily, weekly or any ‘x-minutes’ or ‘x-days’ timetables). In addition, only routes active on the market as in autumn 2014 have been drawn with their routings valid for that particular moment, except seasonal lines usually running during the summer season.

3. No slot agreements

All maps and charts point to locations where vessels in service of a given operator berth. This may sometimes differ from commercial offers which involve subcontractors, yet we believe that drawing slot-based connections would create an image of exaggerated competition and artificially multiply lines to each and every port. This means that we exclusively feature operators that effectively sail their vessels to the presented ports.

4. Domestic traffic

Domestic connections are partly included in this publication, depending on their physical size (i.e. long distance covered at open sea, high turnover and/or transport performance) and importance for international traffic, incl. tourism.

introduction

Every new transport mode has altered the world to a greater or a lesser extent, with nothing being comparable to the revolutionary invention of the wheel. It, however, goes without saying that ferry units' introduction on a mass scale in Europe has undoubtedly changed our corner of the globe.

Ferries take a proud place among other types of ships, owing to their ability to stretch to new roles. First, ferries linked railway networks, then highways, afterwards substituted general cargo ships and 'night boats' on short routes, added tax free markets on-board, followed by services offered up-till-then only to transatlantic voyagers. Ferries mixed into one 'cocktail' of garages, roads and hotels, managed by one crew and powered by a single set of machinery, thus introducing all-in-one low cost shipping. In such a way ferries democratised the travel business by connecting islanders with the mainland, turned islands into top tourism attractions as well as enabled door-to-door and just-in-time transport services virtually all over Europe.

North and South

Multi-role ferries and their younger siblings, pure cargo ro-ro ships, have blossomed in Europe thanks to trade and travel intensifying between nearby countries/regions, separated only by a belt of water. Geography was a factor which helped to flip intra-European shipping technology from lo-lo to ro-ro; however, it also strictly divided the ferry market into North and South.

Regardless of one ro-ro service linking the regions, ferry and ro-ro networks in the North and in the Mediterranean have much in common. For instance Italy, Sweden and the UK similarly shape their service portfolio into a ‘hub and spoke’ type. Regarding ships – double-enders, rarely encountered at open sea, sail on short but intense routes across the Øresund and the Strait of Messina, etc.

Nonetheless, differences can be found as well. In the Mediterranean domestic shipping is relatively more important because of highly populated islands. While in the North none of the islands or archipelagos has more than 100 thou. inhabitants (the most populated, Jersey, has 97 thou., whereas in the Baltic Sea region’s – Gotland has 57 thou.), Sicily, on the other hand, houses five million, Sardinia – 1.7 mln, and the Balearic Islands – 1.1 mln. Yet, none of the Mediterranean island countries can be compared to the United Kingdom and its role in intra-European maritime trade.

Leader in ferry traffic to Scandinavia

Ferry Terminal Świnoujście is the largest one in Poland and one of the most modern terminals on the Baltic Sea. Its location on the shortest route between Scandinavia and Southern Europe has been considered a major advantage for many forwarders and passengers. It is the only Poland's terminal to provide rail cargo handling to and from Sweden. Everyday the terminal offers 11 ferries departure to Sweden, creating virtual bridge between Świnoujście and Scandinavia. It is leader as regards number of calls as well as size of passenger and cargo traffic. The ferry traffic in Świnoujście has been growing every year and the terminal still have excess cargo handling and development potential.

We are open to new market trends and thus we are building a new ferry post to service ferries 220 m in length, that will improve the competitive position of the terminal on ferry transport market. The post will be ready in the middle of 2015. We also plan to accommodate Ferry Terminal Świnoujście to intermodal transport as the investment in the EU new budget period of 2014-2020. Another challenge is the creation of Motorway of the Sea linking Ferry Terminal Świnoujście with Trelleborg. The project received the decision of the European Commission for co-funding. We continue to develop our ferry handling system to meet top standards on the Baltic Sea.

Cargo

One thing is for sure, much more ro-ro freight is carried in the North. Table nos. 1 and 2 reveal that around 70% of cargo on wheels counted by EU statistics is handled in Europe's northern ports (incl. Baltic Russia). But if we take into account non-EU Med. countries (like Turkey – which is added to the original Eurostat tables), and also Africa and the Levant, the South's share would rise up to 35%.

The challenger on the Nordic freight market presents new routes and new solutions.

From 1 January 2015, SOL Continent Line will have a number of new, cost-effective transportation options for you with 5 routes connecting northern Finland and Sweden with Germany, Benelux and the UK. The benefits are numerous. You get more flexible transportation options to choose from for trailers, containers and competitive prices. A comparison reveals also that ro-ro in the North cuts a bigger share in the whole general cargo cake (containing break-bulk, containers as well as ro-ro). In eight countries this share is higher than the 32% EU average, four of which exceed 50%. In two other cases (Estonia and Finland) ro-ro leads the chart in general cargo too, overtaking containers (interestingly, Finland, but also Sweden, would have higher shares if sto-ro technology were counted). In the Mediterranean region only Italy and Malta are over the EU threshold, however, ro-ro cargo champions only in Italian ports.

These differences shape the final outcome of the top tables. The largest Mediterranean ro-ro cargo port, Italian Messina, landed in a 9th position. The Top 20 ro-ro ports chart includes five Italian harbours and five from the UK, but Italy is the only country from the Med. mentioned in Table 3 (Barcelona, with 4.9 mln tn – Spain's largest ro-ro port, and the 4.2 mln tn Greek Piraeus did not qualify).

Passengers

Talking about ferry passengers, the Atlantic, North and Baltic Seas accounted for 51% of 412 mln travellers registered in 2012 as embarking and disembarking in seaports. But pax figures are less precise than cargo volumes since some domestic traffic is left uncounted. The so-called road ferries and commuter services are usually beyond port statistics, yet service classification differs in particular countries. Norway (5.8 mln pax) is one extreme as domestic traffic is excluded on the whole. On the other hand, the share of domestic traffic in Croatia, having a similarly shaped coastline to Norway, totalled 95% (meaning that international services add only 1.3 mln to the total national result of 26.7 mln). Even the Greek ports of Paloukia and Perama, which occupy the 2nd and 3rd spots in the Top 20 list, cast some doubts as they are both situated inside the ‘metropolis’ of Athens and Piraeus. Nonetheless, the 1.0 nautical mile (NM) short distance and the used class of ferries (open deck double-enders) justify to classify the Perama-Paloukia in the same manner as the much longer (up to five NM) Finnish services in the Archipelago Sea (treated as ‘road ferries’, therefore their passengers are not included in Finland’s figures).

Such reservations mean only that domestic traffic includes two categories which should be divided for clarity, namely ‘coastal’ and ‘short sea’ services to remote islands and archipelagos. Anyway, the list of top passenger ferry ports is dominated by harbours serving short connections over a given strait, irrespective if the route connects ports of one or more states.
